

SUMMARY: The document below is the nuncupative will of William Sankey [Sankye], made at the end of July or beginning of August, 1577, and probated on 4 April 1578. According to Alan Nelson, the testator was Oxford's former servant, William Sankey, who had been killed by Oxford's former servant, William Weekes, as alleged by Lord Henry Howard (1540-1614) in BL Cotton Titus C.6, ff. 7-8:

Thus Weekes was commanded to kill Sankey, my Lord's man, and so he did, after he was turned away because he would not give the stab to Yorke when he met him in Holborn. Weekes confessed with what violence he had been set on by my Lord after he had wounded him to the death without either cause or courage, and Sankey told it on his death both to the minister, his wife, and divers others.

See also allegations against Oxford by Charles Arundel in TNA SP 151/45, ff. 110-102:

And I would be as loath to omit the killing of Sankey (being sometime a special favourite to this monster) by his servant Weekes, who at the gallows confessed to the minister that he was procured to this villainy by commandment of his monstrous master, who gave him a hundred pounds in gold after the murder committed to shift him away, and so much was found about when he was apprehended.

And in TNA SP 12/151/46, ff. 103-4:

4 Caused Weekes to murder Sankey because he would not kill Rowland Yorke.

It appears from the wording of the will below that Sankey was not slain outright by Weekes, but died some time after the attack in the company of his wife and friends. It also appears from Lord Henry Howard's account above that Weekes killed Sankey after Oxford had turned Sankey out of his service. Howard's claims that Oxford turned Sankey out of his service because Sankey had refused to stab Rowland Yorke, and that because of Sankey's refusal to stab Rowland Yorke Oxford then urged Weekes to kill Sankey, need not be taken seriously. At the time, Howard and Arundel were under arrest and in fear of their lives, and having mistakenly arrived at the conclusion that Oxford had been the cause of their arrest, were desperately trying to discredit him so that he could not be a witness against them.

According to Alan Nelson, the testator's wife, Mary, named in the will below, was Mary Waldegrave, the stepdaughter of Oxford's maternal uncle, Henry Golding (d.1576), who in a lawsuit in 1579 called herself the 'widow' of William Sankey, having bigamously married Sankey on 13 January 1572 while her husband, Robert Waldegrave, was still living. For further discussion, see the will of Robert Forster (d.1556?), the grandfather of Mary Waldegrave (TNA PROB 11/39, ff. 74-5); Golding, Louis Thorn, An Elizabethan Puritan, (New York: R.R. Smith, 1937), pp. 77-81, 90-100-111; and Nelson, Alan H., Monstrous Adversary (Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 2003), pp. 174-6.

It also seems likely that the testator, 'William Sankey, gentleman', can be identified with the William Sankey, gentleman, of Wivenhoe, who was bound over to keep the peace on 26 June 1573:

Essex Record Office Q/SR 47/38
26 June 1573

Recognizances of William Sankye of Wivenhoe, gentleman, George Dorrell of Colchester, gentleman, and Henry Wyndham of London, gentleman, for the said William to keep the peace towards Edward Jobson, gentleman. The said William appeared, and was discharged by proclamation. Taken before John Lord Darcy of Chiche, and Henry Goldinge, Edmund Bokkinge, William Cardinall, and John Turnor, esquires. Delivered by the hand of William Rame of Colchester by order of Lord Darcy of Chiche.

LM: Testamentum Willelmi Sanky

Memorandum: that William Sankey, late of East Barnet in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, lying on his death-bed about the latter end of July or the beginning of August anno Domini 1577, being required by Gilbert Sherington of Gray's Inn in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, to dispose his goods and all things in order to the end he might wholly bequeath himself to God, answered cheerfully, then being in perfect memory, I give all my goods and all that I have to my wife, Mary, then being present, and said this was, is and shall be his will. And at the time of these his words or soon after he required his said wife to stand good mother to his children, being present at that same time. William Sherington, citizen and [] of the City of London, Hamlet Holcroft, and Gilbert Sherington, gentleman, with others. By me, William Sherington. Per me, Gilbertum Sherington.

Vicesimo Quarto die mensis Aprilis Anno Domini Millesimo Quingentesimo Septuagesimo Octauo Emanauit Commissio Marie Sankye relicte Ad Administrandum bona Iura et Credita huiusmodi secundum tenorem testamenti huiusmodi De bene &c Ad sancta Dei Evangelia iurate.

[=On the twenty-fourth day of the month of April in the year of the Lord the thousand five hundred seventy-eighth a commission issued to Mary Sankey, relict, to administer the goods, rights and credits of the same according to the tenor of the same testament, sworn on the Holy Gospels to well etc.]